A Guide to Identifying Elder Abuse

Elder Abuse is defined as any abuse, exploitation, or neglect of anyone 70 years old or older. This guide is intended to assist mandatory reporters to know what questions to ask and what signs to look for when identifying suspected elder abuse. Speak up and call police if you suspect someone is being abused. You might save someone’s life.

SPEAK UP

Many elders who are being abused are often embarrassed or afraid to say something. That is why it is critical to speak up, ask questions, and call to report suspicions of elder abuse.

Don’t make assumptions. Ask questions.

Tip 1: An abuser often accompanies the victim to various places and appointments. To ensure a safe environment for conversation, it is always a good idea to ask to talk to the elder alone.

Tip 2: Aging skin is thin, but it doesn’t always explain bruising or skin tears. Ask about the injury.

Tip 3: Walking gingerly is not necessarily a sign of aging. Be sure to examine feet for sores and poor hygiene.

Tip 4: Confusion about financial transactions is not always a sign of aging. Ask questions to make sure the confusion is not a symptom of financial exploitation.

Tip 5: Confusion about or changes related to Wills or Power of Attorney documents may be a sign of financial abuse. Be sure to carefully review documents and ask questions to ensure the elder clearly understands and approves any changes that have been made.

Tip 6: Wiring money or withdrawing an unusual amount of money is a possible sign of financial abuse. Ask questions aimed at making sure the person is not being pressured to make the transaction.

Questions to Ask

This list of questions may help you determine if abuse is happening. If an elder answers yes to any of these questions, a call to police may be necessary.
