What to expect this season at City Park Golf Course

With the 2017 golf season underway, we want to make sure you know what's happening at City Park Golf Course. It will be business as usual all spring, summer and fall at one of Denver's most beloved courses, as play on the current City Park Golf Course layout continues all season.

This summer, City Park Golf Course will host the Denver City Amateur Championship, as well as a number of other tournaments, leagues and community events. The clubhouse, pro-shop and Bogey's Restaurant will also be open through the 2017 season.

When the course closes for renovation in late 2017, the redesign will preserve the best features of City Park Golf Course and enhance how all course elements fit together. Panoramic views, tree-lined fairways, undulating greens and an accessible clubhouse will continue to be enjoyed by golfers and neighbors alike for generations to come.

City Park Golf Course will reopen in 2019 following completion of the redesign. The renovated 18-hole course will integrate stormwater detention, which is a very common and environmentally sustainable practice. Golf courses have a long and proven track record of providing effective flood control to neighboring communities through beautiful course designs.

The process to identify the redesign contractor will also be completed this season, with the selected team announced in summer 2017. The competing teams include some of the industry's top golf course designers, engineers, architects and construction contractors.

We'll be in touch throughout the 2017 golf season on upcoming events and opportunities to learn more about the redesign. In the meantime, learn more at CPGCreDesign.org.
