PROCEDURES WITH RESPECT TO CONFIDENTIAL INFORMATION SUBMITTED IN APPLICATIONS FOR PREQUALIFICATION

The information submitted in prequalification applications – including financial statements – is used by the City to evaluate the capacity of the applicants to perform work on City contracts. Although basic information about prequalified contractors is public record, the City does not publish or disseminate the detailed company information, such as bonding capacity and financial statements, provided by applicants.

The City is subject to the Colorado Open Records Act (“CORA”), which requires the City to allow inspection of its records upon request by any person. However, CORA prohibits the City from allowing inspection of “confidential commercial or financial information” provided by others to the City.

If the City receives a request to inspect and copy a prequalification application file under CORA, it is our practice to immediately notify each company whose application is the subject of the request. We ask the Company to tell us which information, if any, in the application the company considers “confidential commercial or financial information” as defined in the law. The City will withhold from examination the portions of the file designated as confidential by the company.

If the City is sued for withholding that information, we will join the company as a party in the suit. The company will have to prove to the court that the information is confidential under the law. Most of the facts necessary to prove the confidentiality of the information under the law are within the company’s knowledge, and not the City’s.
