DENVER DREAM CENTER
$12,731 has been billed to date for resources, transportation, work supplies, etc. in support of men and women coming out of incarceration.

Case management for these clients was case-by-case but generally fell into these categories:
- relational and spiritual support
- financial support (RTD passes, gift cards, clothing, small loans, etc.)
- enrollment into the community corrections apprenticeship
- resource navigation
PAROLE COACHING

2023 Review:
• Through 5/2023, coaching classes were held 1-2x/week at the parole office; curriculum was used
• Two men from SCF (JP and Joel) continued to conduct Zoom classes for some amount of time

2024 Plan:
• Two Thrive staff will attend Parole Orientations on the second and fourth Wednesday of every month at 1030am. They will connect with new parolees and offer relational support and practical guidance (resources).
• Focus on 3 readiness factors: transportation, housing, job
• Relevant parolee information (Name, DOC #, contact info) will be collected and a staff will conduct weekly check-ins

• One of the most inspiring aspects of Daniel’s journey is his involvement with The Denver Dream Center, a nonprofit organization dedicated to helping men and women transition from incarceration back into society. Daniel’s job there is a beacon of hope for those who have faced their share of challenges. He’s part of a team that organizes community dinners for the homeless and less fortunate, demonstrating that every person has the potential to contribute positively to their community. - from an article in atreatmentcenter.com

• I love working at DDC because it provides an opportunity for me to give back to the community in a meaningful, fulfilling, and impactful way. This environment breeds nothing but growth and positivity. It challenges me to be my best self and affords me a chance to mend some of the destruction I caused in my past - Sean Marshall

• The reason I love working at the Denver Dream Center is because my pops always told me if I find a job that I really love then I’ll never have to work another day for the rest of my life. I love the Denver Dream Center because everyone is treated equal, no one is judge by there past, and everyone is given a chance to let God work in them and through them. It’s hard for me to put into words what it means to me to be able to work and give back to the same streets I was apart of destroying for so long, God is doing amazing things through the Denver Dream Center and I’m honored to be in the DDC family. - Mike Johnson
